In Gratitude to Pope Francis for Expressing the Church's Strong Opposition to Reproductive Surrogacy

From: <https://www.cathmed.org/the-pulse/in-gratitude-to-pope-francis-for-expressing-the-churchs-strong-opposition-to-reproductive-surrogacy/>

February 15, 2024. By

Nadia Smith

The Catholic Medical Association is grateful to Pope Francis for shedding light on the concerning trend of surrogacy, the practice by which a couple, or even a single person, enters into an agreement with a woman who is to carry and give birth to the child through in vitro fertilization. This could even involve the donation of sperm or egg, or both, further violating the human dignity of procreation. The Pope has called for a universal ban on the practice.

“The path to peace calls for respect for life, for every human life, starting with the life of the unborn child in the mother’s womb, which cannot be suppressed or turned into an object of trafficking,” he told the Diplomatic Corps at the Holy See in an address earlier this month. “In this regard, I deem deplorable the practice of so-called surrogate motherhood, which represents a grave violation of the dignity of the woman and the child, based on the exploitation of situations of the mother’s material needs. A child is always a gift and never the basis of a commercial contract. Consequently, I express my hope for an effort by the international community to prohibit this practice universally.”

In the United States, surrogacy is not federally regulated, and policies vary state by state. Some states have limited protection for surrogacy, with 10 states making commercial surrogacy explicitly legal and courts enforce both paid and unpaid surrogacy agreements. There are few restrictions on who can become intended parents in these states. Other states have no laws at all. However, commercial surrogacy is illegal in many countries in Europe and Asia. Countries such as Spain, Portugal, Italy, Germany and France have an outright ban regardless of whether it is paid or unpaid. Currently, surrogacy is a $14 billion global industry that is expected to grow to nine times that amount over the next decade.

“A mother’s womb is never meant for sale or rent,” said Dr. Greg F. Burke, the co-chair of the CMA Ethics Committee. “Surrogacy, at its core, turns human reproduction into a transactional process, devoid of the beauty of genetic relation, true marital union, and a loving communion of persons.”

The Church maintains that children should arise from an act of love between a husband and wife, in cooperation with God. The Church teaches that the use of technology to overcome infertility is good as long as it is done in a way that strengthens the marriage, respects the dignity of the spouses and of the new human life, and respects the sacred procreative act. It is morally wrong when it does the opposite as is the case with today’s artificial reproductive technologies.

As John M. Haas, Ph.D., S.T.L., the president emeritus of the National Catholic Bioethics Center, explains in Begotten Not Made: A Catholic View of Reproductive Technology, within the United States “an entire ‘industry’ has emerged with little or no governmental or professional regulations to protect the interests of the men, women or children who become involved. Women receive fertility drugs which can result in their conceiving four, five or six children at once, risking their own health and the health of their children. Some have several eggs fertilized in vitro (in a glass dish) without realizing that this may lead to the destruction of these embryos or their being frozen for later experimental use.”

That is why, even though the Catholic Medical Association, along with the National Catholic Bioethics Center and the National Association of Catholic Nurses, USA are opposed to these reproductive procedures, they recently made a public comment regarding the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention’s (CDC) move to change the reporting of pregnancy success rates from assisted reproductive technology (ART) programs and to data validation procedures from fertility clinics around the nation. CMA, with these allied associations, noted that these changes would endanger the safety of women who use assisted reproductive technology, especially women who are egg donors and surrogates, because there is already a lack of substantial research, data, and information on risks and harms to their health, which would only be compounded by this move.

Further, new manipulations of embryos are occurring, such as the engendering of a three-parent embryo. The United States does not allow the implantation of such embryos, but research is being done in the United States with embryo implantation into a woman taking place in another country. There is also other immoral research taking place like cloning. These allied associations, while expressing their opposition to these and other such technologies, believe the CDC needs to enhance regulation of ART to prevent unethical practices and research, and protect women and the children from the moment of conception from such technologies.

“Rigorous reporting of the nature of all reproductive research should be required for the protection of all parties, especially the most vulnerable, the baby who is being treated as a commodity to be purchased,” said Marie Hilliard, Ph.D., RN, co-chair of the CMA Ethics Committee. Ultimately, the issue with in vitro fertilization, especially surrogacy, and other such technologies is that they “violate the human dignity of procreation, by which the parents, through the mutual giving of themselves to each other, and in union with the Author of all life, engender a new human being,” she said.

Instead, CMA and its allied associations point to an ethical and proven way to use reproductive technology which honors and respects the fertility and dignity of each person involved, and that is Natural Procreative Technology (NaProTECHNOLOGY) along with Fertility Awareness Based Methods (FABMs).

The Pope congratulated and encouraged all those working in this field during his address last year to the WOOMB International Congress, noting the importance of “personalized medicine,” that keeps a person’s unique and unrepeatable nature at the forefront and finds ways to respect the sacred act of procreation.

“In this field, a greater understanding of the processes of procreation, using modern scientific findings,” he said is helping “many couples make informed and ethically sound decisions that are more respectful of the person and his or her dignity.”

GOD OF LOVE AND LIFE FATHER, SON and HOLY SPIRIT

“Whoever serves me must follow me, and where I am, there also will my servant be. The Father will honor whoever serves me.” John 12:26

As servants of Jesus we must listen to the word of God and do His will. We must have courage and be ready to combat the spiritual powers of evil.

The evils in our lives today are given to us by Satan and those that cooperate with him. We must fight this evil and return goodness and honor to our lives, our families, our schools and our country. A great place to start would be replacing death to the pre-born with love and welcoming kindness to life.

Do you know that faithful doctors will tell you they knew when a hospital was performing abortions. They could feel the evil.

TIME REQUIRED

A reflection for March 17, The Fifth Sunday of Lent

To appreciate a great painting, you cannot simply give it a passing glance. You need to stop and notice its composition, the use of colors, the interplay of light and shadow, and the technique of the artist.

To appreciate a celebrated novel, you need to do more than skim through its pages. You need to spend time with the text and pay attention to the movement of the plot, the development of the characters, and the skill of the author.

To appreciate a famous piece of music, you cannot just have it playing in the background. You need to carefully listen to the melody, the rhythm, the lyrics, and the instrumentation, and notice the way the piece affects you emotionally.

To truly appreciate something, you need to spend time with it. This also applies to the scripture readings proclaimed at Sunday Mass. To appreciate these readings, we need to do more than just listen to them as they are read. We need to spend time with them.

The readings this Sunday contain words that may be particularly worth our time and attention.

In the Gospel (John 12:20-33), Jesus tells Philip and Andrew, “Amen, amen, I say to you, unless a grain of wheat falls to the ground and dies, it remains just a grain of wheat; but if it dies, it produces much fruit.”

With these words Jesus refers to his coming passion and death that would lead to his resurrection and our salvation. His death would bear fruit.

If we spend time with these words, we may come to understand they may also refer to our need to die to sin so that we might produce the fruit of holiness.

A further appreciation can bring us to recognize ourselves as the fruit to which Jesus refers: We are the fruit that has blossomed from the wood of the cross that, in the resurrection of Jesus, became the tree of life.

If we spend time reflecting on our First Reading (Jeremiah 31:33-34), we may come to appreciate that through Jesus, we are the people of that new covenant that God promised to make with his people. As we are told at every Mass, “This is the chalice of my blood, the blood of the new and eternal covenant.”

That reading also speaks of God’s promise to place his law in the hearts of his people. God has done just that through the outpouring of the Holy Spirit who directs us in the ways of holiness. As Jesus tells us, “When he comes, the Spirit of truth, he will guide you to all truth” (John 16:13).

The more we spend time with the scripture readings, the more we appreciate their message, the more we appreciate what the Lord has done for us, and the more we appreciate the dignity that is ours as children of God.

It takes time to truly appreciate the Word of God!
